Throughout the western society the concept of digital platforms has arisen as a way of educate, inform and keep track of patients data. The platforms are put forward as the solution to many organizational issues. However, a fundamental challenge is that of integrating new knowledge in new ways. To really meet and use the platforms as intended rather than letting a lack of accuracy in technological support for health care, not least the confidence in individual solutions prevail. This is necessary in order to meet students, employees and demographic trends and patients with diverse needs.

Contributions to this track are intended to present approaches, case studies, lessons learned, implementation and integration options, as well as patient confidence in the accuracy of such services and technologies. Additionally, knowledge update in such integrated systems (by learning special situations) to enhance the knowledge base and enlarge the spectrum of health care options are welcome.

Subtopics:

- What is needed to provide learning to the patient from a digital platform
- In what way will a digital platform add in terms of quality of life if you are a patient or a student
- How to meet demographic challenges when developing digital platforms?
- How to design learning or information platforms suited for various ages and cultures?
